Toenail Reconstruction
What is it?

Toenail reconstruction is a procedure used within podiatry to build a new toenail when the original nail is damaged, unsightly or lost following injury or surgery. The reconstructed nail is flexible, and can be filed and painted exactly the same as you would a natural nail. Just avoid nail polish removers containing acetone as this can denature the resin.

Who is it suitable for?

Anyone who feels they would like a cosmetic improvement to their nail. Nail reconstruction is perfect for;

- Fungal nail infections
- Cracked / split nails
- Bleeding under the nail
- Trauma nail resulting in a permanently disfigured nail plate
- Damaged nail following nail surgery
- Thickened and unsightly nails
- Nail discolouration

How long does it last?

It is advised that the nail is removed and/or reapplied after 6-8 weeks. You may return to clinic to have the reconstruction removed with a drill or it can be soaked off at home with acetone.

What is the aftercare advice?

To prevent premature lifting of the nail, it is advisable to avoid shoes which are narrow or pointy around the toe area and heels. Creams/lotions should be avoided around the nail, and the extended exposures in water, such as jacuzzi’s or saunas.

An assessment is usually necessary before undergoing nail reconstruction, to prepare the nail plate, explain the process and give advice on looking after the new nail.

The price and duration of your nail reconstruction is dependent on an individual basis and will be discussed at the initial assessment.
